

Ljupcho Antovski was born in 1977 in Skopje. He graduated with honors in 2001 at the Faculty of Electrical Engineering in Skopje. Ljupcho finished the postgraduate studies at the Faculty of Science in 2003 with the master thesis "Mobile Payments". In 2005 he was awarded with the World Summit Award in the category of e-science. Ljupcho defended the Ph.D. thesis in January 2008. As an assistant professor at the Faculty of Computer Science and Engineering he lectures the undergraduate courses: Software Requirements Analysis, Software Construction, E-business Architecture and Design, Wireless and mobile technologies, Software Project Management, Management in ICT, Semantically Enabled Architectures. He lectures the postgraduate courses: Software Project Management and Object Architectures for Enterprise Systems.

The areas of his scientific research areas: project and innovation management, electronic voting systems, semantically enabled architectures, mobile and ubiquitous applications, e-business and e-government services. He has published numerous peer-reviewed scientific papers in international journals and scientific conferences. He participated in several international research, educational, and projects for structural reforms. He is the architect of the information systems of several central election commissions on the Balkans. Ljupcho has numerous international consultancies as an ICT expert. He is the president of the Technical Committee for ICT Standardization at Institute for Standardization of Republic of Macedonia. He is as well member of several international scientific and technical organizations.